Excerpt: .were to marry, what would be your expectations? If I got the woman I liked, I should expect to be very happy and comfortable, returned the youth, in apparent simplicity. You are so droll! Stapleton; but you know you are a favourite of mine. Do not, however, think me impertinently inquisitive. It is no business of mine, to be sure; but young people are so careless about their future prospects, What I meant was, in case of your profession not proving satisfactory; and the most brilliant talents, we know, are not always appreciated as they deserve. I really am anxious for your welfare, my dear young friend: in such a case, now, how could you commence housekeeping? Oh, the governor must fork out, I fancy; that is, my father, you know, must come down. There s nothing else for it that I know of. You surely would satisfy yourself on so important a consideration, before you actually made your proposals? Oh, yes; of course. This was indefinite, but it did not deter Mrs. Temple from her scheme of sending for Ellen, immediately, that Cartwright might examine her teeth; and as it not unfrequently happens, that not only the actions, but their motives, are, by every servant of the house, as well known as they are to the master and mistress of it, it came to pass that Barney became acquainted with the plan of cheating, as he considered it, the son of his first benefactor....
