Eighth--Improper design of the boiler or other apparatus by which the elements of combustion are chilled before they have attained the maximum temperature which the other conditions would permit. Ninth--Unclean heating surfaces and leaky brickwork often cause serious waste of heat. Tenth--Unnecessarily cold feed-water is a source of loss of efficiency. Eleventh--Careless firing may seriously increase any or all of the above losses of efficiency. The working conditions of boilers are but studied by means of boiler tests. These should be conducted according to the Code of Boiler Trials advocated by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. Copies of the code can be had on application to F. R. Hutton, Secy., 12 West Thirtyfirst street, New York City, or to the writer of this paper. In this code two general methods--the Standard...
