Excerpt: .while to pause in our studies to consider Paul s conduct as a citizen. It will be a fitting introduction to the study of this lesson. The magistrates of Philippi, in their haste to yield to public clamor, had outraged Roman law in ordering a Roman citizen to be scourged. As a Roman, Paul was entitled to receive from the magistrates protection against the mob. Instead of that protection, the magistrates themselves had ordered the apostles to be scourged and then imprisoned without a proper hearing. This was a serious crime, severely punished under Roman law. The magistrates might lose their position and be sent to Rome in chains for trial, unless they could justify or satisfactorily explain their unlawful order. Paul knew this, and so insisted upon a proper apology and an honorable discharge by the magistrates in person. This would cause others...
